Maiden Point is a well built Victorian farmhouse built around 1866 for Richard S. Dodson. Like many of the houses of Talbot, Maiden Point has been remodeled and enlarged since its original construction. The present house is composed of a three bay wide, two and one-half story frame portion with a one bay, two story middle section, a lower three bay, two story addition with enclosed porch, all of which extend eastward. On the west side of the main part is a three bay, two story wing built around 1920 with a two story enclosed porch on its west end. Furthermore, there are covered porches along the rear (River side) of the tall portion and in front of each entrance. All of the frame walls are covered with white shingles and most of the windows have 6/6 sash and louvered shutters. In composition the house is similar to Love's Folly, but is a different date by fifty years.

Inside, the floor plan of the house consists of a stair hall and dining room in the tall portion, a kitchen in the first wing and two rooms in the second wing with laundry room beyond. On the opposite side is a large living room with sun room beyond. In 1962 the east portion of the house was remodeled and in 1969 the sun room. Other than that there has been no changes, probably since the photo was taken in 1925 showing the house with the same mass as it has today.

On examination of the cellar, a square brick foundation was found in the center of the dining room which indicates that originally the dining room was divided into two rooms with back-to-back fireplaces. The evidence was confirmed on the second story where the floor has been patched.

The marble mantel in the dining room is probably re-used from the original fireplace. Unlike most houses of this period, the stair ascends to the second story in a flight. Other than the above changes, there is little which is not original in their respective positions.

East of the main house, overlooking Little Neck Creek and the Miles River is a small early 19th century dwelling probably built for the care taker or farm manager. It is a vernacular structure covered with brown shingles and composed of three sections: a two bay two story section, a one bay one and one-half story section and a single bay leanto. Each of the three sections contain one room with the stair in the larger section. Originally, when the house was only the one and one-half story portion, there was a stair enclosed in the northeast corner. The taller section was probably added in the 1870's or 80's.

A photo in the collection of the owners of Maiden Point is titled "Cottage" and was a two story 19th century dwelling. It was possibly the house which formerly stood northwest of the house, now in the River where piers and a well can be seen from a boat.

Maiden Point is situated on the Miles River between Little Neck Creek to the east and Spencer Creek to the west.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Maiden Point is interesting as a survival of Victorian farmhouse architecture of the third quarter of the 19th century. It reflects the tastes of a modestly prosperous family of the period, as well as the tastes of the twentieth century family in its addition and covering of wood shingles.

It is also of interest because of the existence of a simple 19th century dwelling for those who cared for the farm.

Maiden Point is mentioned in the History of St. Michael's Parish, published by the parish in recent years.
